

Dear Student

The start of the new academic year is always an exciting time for everyone at the University. We wish you well in your studies with us, and hope you will play an active role within the University and the Students' Union during the forthcoming academic year.

The University of Ulster's vision is to be an institution with a national and international reputation for excellence, innovation and regional engagement. We have a strong regional presence with four campuses throughout Northern Ireland, and members of the University community – both staff and students – play an active part in the lives of the communities in which those campuses are located.

As a University of Ulster student, you should be aware that you are a representative of the University both on and off campus, and carry with you the good name and reputation of the University.

It is a regrettable fact that anti-social behaviour by a small minority of our students has, in the past, tarnished the good name of the University and its student body. The most common issues reported are noise related, including noisy parties and rowdy behaviour on streets.

Accordingly, we ask that you be respectful and considerate of local residents and the communities that you live in, in order to protect the reputation of your University and foster good community relations.

We would therefore like to remind you that the University of Ulster's Student Charter states “that you will not behave in an anti-social manner, on or off campus and that you will behave in a responsible manner in respect of the accommodation you occupy, relations with co-habitants, neighbours and local community. Anti-social behaviour may result in disciplinary action.”

That said, we hope your time at the University will be rewarding and fulfilling, and that your studies with us are memorable – for all the right reasons.

Yours sincerely

Professor Richard Barnett
Vice-Chancellor, University of Ulster
